Obviously this is not ideal for quick-action - although I did get some cool screenshots earlier, when I realised my F12 was working.Q: Why is this regex replacing the first character with a backslash? I am capturing a group of strings from a string with 3 elements: subject, location, city. The regex that I used is: `(subject)(location)(city)` I am then splitting the string into individual strings: subject, location, city The split function replaces the "" with "". Why is this? My strings are being processed into one long string, so why is it converting \ to \? A: In your example, subject is (probably) a backslash, so you need to make the first backslash your delimiter: `subject(location)(city)` ^^^^^^^^ ^^^^^ ^^^^^ EDIT: Here is the regex (using c++ syntax for ease of readability): `subject[\t]*location[\t]*city` EDIT: Here is a live demo (and test), which shows that the ""s are being replaced by "":

#include #include #include #include int main() { std::string input = "subject test "; // before splitting std::stringstream output; std::regex subject(R"(subject)(location)(city)"); std::smatch sm; // std::cout 0cc13bf012

It is well known that the oxygen concentration in the vapor phase of the N~2~/O~2~ gas mixture is much higher than that in the liquid phase of the solution.^[@ref30],[@ref40]^ In addition, the native oxide on the surface of the graphene will further reduce the total number of charges on the surface of the QD film and, therefore, further slow down the charge recombination. The result shows that the dark current of the as-prepared device (Figure 2{ref-type="fig"})(#fig2){ref-type="fig"}f) is about an order of magnitude lower than those of the proposed device (Figure 2{ref-type="fig"})(#fig2){ref-type="fig"}a), demonstrating that the proposed device could be much more effective in photovoltaic applications. This additional over three orders of magnitude reduction of the dark current in the QD device indicates the superior capability of the proposed device for enhancing PV performance. Conclusions {#sec3} ===== In conclusion, by coupling the CPF technology with the OTS/mobilization strategy, we have demonstrated an effective approach for enhancing the performance of CQD PV cells. The photovoltaic performance of the OTS/CQD/graphene device exceeds that of conventional CQD PV cell by more than an order of magnitude. The superior performance of the OTS/CQD/graphene devices is due to the large surface area of the graphene layer that efficiently captures the electron--hole pairs generated by the CQDs and the low dark current of the CQD/OTS-modified graphene devices, which prolongs the lifetime of the carriers on the CQD. More importantly, the OTS/CQD/graphene PV cells exhibit an excellent photovoltaic efficiency of 5.45%, which makes them promising for practical applications.
