Editor and Editions Image editing software is sometimes considered a tool and sometimes a product. To use an image editing program, a novice needs only a few basic tools such as the Crop tool. Beginners will find that the real benefit of this software is that it gives them access to an image's in-depth editing tools. Therefore, editing a photo in Elements, Photoshop, or Lightroom is like using a super-high-end photo package, as opposed to using your regular photo software (which usually has limited editing tools, no layers, and no advanced color or other features). If you're serious about editing, you can invest

Q: AngularJS ng-form not working with pjax I have a simple login form that I want to update via AJAX when the user is typing, and store it into a property of $scope.loginForm. I am using the pjax-js library for this. The code looks like this: $scope.loginForm is defined as $scope.loginForm = {}; I'm using the following javascript: $scope.$watch(function() { return $rootScope.pjax; }, function() { if ($rootScope.pjax) { $scope.loginForm = {}; } }); $scope.onFormSubmit = function () { $http({ method: 'POST', url: '', data: $scope.loginForm }).success(function () { $rootScope.pjax = false; }); }; $scope.onFormSubmit(); When the AJAX callback is called, loginForm is an empty object. The pjax-js library redirects the user back to the same view. It works fine when the form is not using ng-form, but ng-form doesn't update the form when the pjax-js library sends the user back to the view. The form posts, but it does not update. Am I missing something? Is there a way to force the change? EDIT: I have also tried changing the form to a directive. When I do this, it does not update. What is strange is that the $
