I have a LAN connected with a IP router connected to the LAN port of the PC and my ISP's modem. The modem has a built-in router with 3 LAN ports.

From what I understood, if I switch on router from default setting to DHCP mode, it will automatically assign the IP address of the ISP's modem to the router. So I should not have to change the IP address of the router. If I do this, I will be able to use the 3 LAN ports of the router to connect with 3 different PCs in the same lan.

My question is, what is the best method to change the default IP address and gateway of the router. Note: this is not a duplicate of this question. In this question, OP is asking to change the default IP of the IP router and want to change the IP of 3 PCs connected to the router. I am asking to change the default IP of the ISP's router. A: I don't think you need to change any settings to get this to work, as long as your ISP router is DHCP enabled. Set the "default gateway" 6d1f23a050
