A: Ok I think I got it. In the old days when I had to use AutoCAD the only way to find out how something worked was to hand write the instructions. It would be something like this: AT&T: "Can you connect me to someone in Santa Clara" TC: "I don't know anyone in Santa Clara. Maybe this guy knows" AT&T: "Ok thanks anyway" The way I do things is usually from when I need to find out how to do something: AT&T: "I don't know how to do that. Let me ask Google" TC: "Ok sure" AT&T: "Ok, let's see... My AutoCAD is great I really want to use it but it sucks" TC: "Why?" AT&T: "It keeps showing me all these long instructions, what am I looking for in here" TC: "Ok, I don't know what it is you're looking for so I'll just look for it" TC: "I can't find anything, I'm looking in this folder" AT&T: "Ok, I think you're looking for this thing" This is usually enough to give you some idea about how to do something in AutoCAD. But with the internet, it has changed. Today to find out about something, you ask Google. So when I googled "how do you add tables to a drawing in AutoCAD" I got this from the Autodesk site: (those are links to help you, the result is I got in the picture below) And then when you hover over "How to add a table to a drawing in AutoCAD" (or any of the menus on the right), it explains everything there is to know about adding tables to drawings. So what do you think about this? Good if you're good at hand writing and have time, Bad, you spend all your time looking at what it tells you, Neutral, you don't use it either way Good if you're bad at hand writing and have time, Bad, you spend all your time looking at what it tells you, Neutral, you don't use it either way Worse if you're bad at both and have time, Good, you spend all your time looking at what it tells you, Bad, you 6d1f23a050
